

Low Vision Clinic

Is your vision causing you to stop doing the things you enjoy? Find out what you can do to bring those activities back into your life. Our Low Vision Clinic will work with your eye doctor to address your low vision needs.

Are you having trouble reading the newspaper, viewing photos, recognizing people, writing checks, or reading medication directions? Perhaps it's time for a visit to our Low Vision Clinic.

You are not alone. Approximately 14 million Americans, about 1 in 20, have low vision. Common disorders include: cataracts, macular degeneration, diabetic retinopathy, and glaucoma.

The Iris Network can help.

The Iris Network Low Vision Clinic has what you need

- Discover the extent and cause of your vision loss.
- Make use of remaining usable vision with tools and training tailored to your needs.

The Iris Network Low Vision Clinic has eye doctors, occupational therapists, and vision rehabilitation therapists who can assist you in maximizing your remaining vision. Our experts will recommend lighting and glare solutions for your home or place of work. You can receive training in adaptive techniques and learn about devices (writing guides, magnifiers, video magnifiers, talking pill bottles, etc.) and new technologies that will help you resume your daily activities safely and independently.

Call us to learn about eligibility and the referral process.

1 (800) 715-0097 or
(207) 774-6273

189 Park Avenue
Portland, ME 04102
www.theiris.org

The Iris Network is a community-based, Maine nonprofit 501(c)(3) public benefit corporation. Our vision is to build a world where no person is limited by visual impairment or blindness. The Iris Network is accredited by the National Accreditation Council for Blindness and Low Vision Services.